"Screen saver lets your computer act like a hands-free answering machine. It will keep itself turned on while it is in use. You can specify what the computer should be doing when the screen saver is turned on. The screen saver can be password protected. It can run silently, or with sounds. You can specify text to show on the status bar or the progress bar, and the duration of the screen saver. By default, the computer will lock itself after 30 minutes of no activity. Set it to lock after 0 minutes to lock right after the screen saver starts. Set it to ignore ctrl-alt-del. This will allow you to lock your computer without having to leave it first. When the screen saver is unlocked, the keyboard buffer will be cleared. Keyboard macros can be assigned to any key combination." -Is anyone else interested in a feature like this? I know that there are similar programs out there, but this one looks very interesting.
